The script is funny, sharp and surprisingly relevant to today's political scene. A likeable 'dumb blonde' type, Billie Dawn has been dragged along to Washington by her tyrannical lover, the junkyard millionaire Harry Brock. When Brock asks journalist Paul Verrall to educate her in the ways and manners of the Washington elite, he gets more than he bargained for. Verrall gives Billie an education in art, literature, music and politics that sets her on a collision course with the corrupt Brock and the powerful men he has in his pocket.
