Lakeland
COMMUNITY COLLEGE
FIRE SCIENCE AND
EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT

Prepare, prevent protect

Our program meets the needs of today's career and volunteer firefighters, pre-service students, and business and industry personnel having an interest in fire safety and protection. Fire science courses reflect the philosophies and techniques of today's fire service leaders.

Lakeland's Fire Science Technology degree is recognized and listed by the National Fire Academy – Fire and Emergency Services Higher Education Program.

Employment in this field is growing in the United States, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics. Fire service specialists are sought by fire departments nationwide, as well as by insurance companies, industrial organizations, government agencies, and businesses dealing with fire protection and equipment.

Degree and certificate options are available. Our program is designed for both pre-service students and in-service practitioners. Our classes are offered on campus and conveniently online. Whether you're seeking a degree or professional development, our program will get you job-ready and ready to advance.

Credentials

Graduates will earn an Associate of Applied Science Degree in Fire Science Technology. Our graduates may also be eligible for bonus points on entry examinations by area fire departments.

Continuing your education

Are you interested in continuing your education to earn a bachelor's degree in the field? Lakeland's Holden University Center can help you achieve this goal!
